

The Daily Times-Journal

Copies of the Fort William Daily Times-Journal may be found on most any of the entente battlefronts as well as on the "floating defenders" in the North Sea. Lieuts. Hinton and Jones, with the motor boat patrol "somewhere along the British coast," have just received their copy of the T.-J., announcing the advent of the States into the great war, and they honored it by putting it in the forefront of their picture. Lieut. Hinton's parents, Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Hinton, live at 224 north Marks street, and Lieut. Jones' wife lives on Ross street, this city.

At an undisclosed location in the North Sea, two Fort William men, Sub-Lieut. Ray Hinton and Sub-Lieut. Edward Jones of the British Royal Naval Volunteer Reserve showcase the front page of the Fort William Daily Times Journal announcing the United States' entry into the war.

Edward R. Jones, well known in the Lakehead grain and shipping industry, was employed in the steamship business in Winnipeg before coming to Fort William seven years previous. He also became the first enlistment from the Thunder Bay District appointed as Sub-Lieutenant with the Royal Naval Volunteer Reserve.

Before enlisting for service, Ray Hinton was employed at the Fort William Daily Times Journal in the business office. After reaching England and passing his examinations, he was placed second in command of a motor boat which focused on instructional work based out the port city of Southampton.
